Participants in Sweetpotato Show and Sale

The Junior Sweet Potato Show and Sale is the culmination of a project designed to teach how to produce, grade, store and market quality sweet potatoes. Each year its open to all 4-H members, FFA members, and FHA members. The Sweet Potato Show and Sale has been expanded to include a baked goods ouspuy, educational exhibits, and a poster contest, all involving the sweet potato.

It's a fact that to get a competitive lot of three bushels or five bushels of sweet potatoes (classes in which they compete in the show), one has to grow at least one-half acres of sweet potatoes. That's a lot of sweet potatoes for this area of the state. However, there is a demand and a market for good quality sweet potatoes in this area. It can be profitable and rewarding project for any youth in this area.

Shown above are 4-Hers from Appomattox County who grew sweet potatoes, but not enough to get quality exhibits, but who did enter educational exhibits in the show. They are from left to right: David Robinson, Solly Robinson, Virginia Robinson, Nathaniel Burrell, and a happily smiling Brenda Robinson. The names probably lead you to believe that it was a family affair, which it was. Next year we hope to get many more youths in this project.

This sweet potato show and sale is jointly sponsored by the Cooperative Extension Service, Union Camp Corporation, Southern States, V.C.L.A., several supermarkets and business firms. The Virginia Cooperative Extension Service by law and purpose is dedicated to serve all people on an equal and nondiscriminatory basis. An Equal Opportunity/Affirmative Action Employer.

Virginia Marks 50th Anniversary In Forestry Program

Governor Mills E. Godwin accepted a golden anniversary plaque from Mr. Sidney Weitzman of the United States Forest Service in recognition of Virginia's cooperation with the Federal Government in forest resource management. 1974 is the golden anniversary of landmark legislation in Federal-State cooperation in the prevention and suppression of forest fires, forest tree nursery development, and forestry assistance to private landowners. According to State Forester W. F. Custard, the Clarke-McNary Act of 1924, which initially provided Federal funds on a matching basis, was a milestone in the early history of the Virginia Division of Forestry. These early funds combined with increased state appropriations permitted the purchase of essential forest fire fighting tools, the construction of several fire lookout towers, and the expansion of a forest tree nursery.

Virginia launched a state forestry program in 1914 with the establishment of the Office of State Forester in the State Geological Commission. The move was triggered when the state's concerned leadership became alarmed over the abrupt reduction in timber harvesting, said Custard. From the pine forests of the Costal Plain to the hardwoods of the Appalachians, it was apparent that forest fires and mismanagement of Virginia's forests were taking a heavy toll of Virginia's economy. Many large timber companies were closing their operations and moving to other states. In 1909 Virginia hit the peak production of 2,250,000,000 board feet of lumber. Within the next four years lumber production declined to 1¼ billion board feet annually. It was this decline that caused the Governor and the General Assembly to create a state agency to develop a forestry program. Custard said the first efforts of this agency, now known as the Virginia Division of Forestry, a division of the Department of Conservation and Economic Development, were directed toward forest fire prevention and a strengthening of the several cooperative forest fire protection associations formed by large landowners.

Forest fire control was and will continue to be the basic element of forest resource management. The Clarke-McNary Act helped to point the way for closer cooperation among the forestland owners, general public, forest industries, and local, state, and Federal governments, continued Custard.

The 1974 Clarke-McNary appropriation for Virginia amounted to $565,000. This is approximately one-fifth of the forest fire control funds expended by Virginia this year. The amount of Federal funding through the Clarke-McNary Act is determined by the amount of state monies expended for forest fire control.

As a result of the support of the many Governors and General Assembly through the years, Virginia has been able to develop an effective forest fire control organization. This has made investment in Virginia's forest resource by industry and private citizens a profitable enterprise which has benefited the entire economy of the Commonwealth, concluded Custard.
